3.2.2. Representativeness of our sample. While the focus on large financial institutions is common in the literature (Adams and Mehran, 2003), we caution that our findings may not generalize to smaller financial firms. Panels B and C of Table 1 provide descriptive statistics on how our sample firms differ from the population of Compustat financial firms (4766 firms).

In economics, a market is transparent if much is known by many about: What products and services or capital assets are available, market depth (quantity available), what price, and where. Transparency is important since it is one of the theoretical conditions required for a free market to be efficient. Price transparency can, however, lead to higher prices.
